

History

Guidance for AS.

Use the revision booklet to plan and practice past questions, also complete the revision activities for the different sections in the course contained in it. There are also some excellent resources for the Crusades, Mussolini and the Norman Conquest on the departmental website that are worth looking at for those students who feel confident enough to expand on their reading. Finally, it would also be advisable for those students with Facebook or Twitter to like the departmental feeds on either of these social networking sites as they are regularly updated with essay plans and resources for the modules. If a student has neither of these then they can check their email for these resources as well.

Guidance for A2

The main focus for the January exam period is to concentrate on the coursework module and keep to the coursework deadlines for each of the coursework sections. Any preparatory work the student can do for the May exam would also be worthwhile. There are a variety of articles and links on the departmental intranet site as well as resources available over email, Facebook and Twitter. The LRC is also particularly well resourced for both the coursework and examined modules in both the modern and medieval options and students should definitely take the opportunity to read wider in both these modules to gain the depth of understanding required to do well.
